Nutrition Nuggets

Blueberries

One of my fondest memories from the past summer is picking fresh blueberries with our son! Compared to other popular fruits and vegetables, blueberries are at the top of the chart in antioxidants. Not too shabby! These antioxidants neutralize free radicals, which cause damage to cellular tissue.
In addition to antioxidants, blueberries are high in:

- Vitamin C-absorbs iron, reduces free radicals, and repairs connective tissues, such as skin, blood vessels and bone
- Vitamin K - aids in blood clotting and bone health
- Manganese - important for the health of your central nervous system.
- Fiber - both soluble and insoluble
- Studies have also indicated that the nutrients in blueberries not only prevent oxidative stress on the brain, but also improve learning capacity and motor skills.

Fresh blueberries are in season from May to October (so there is still time!). When selecting, look for berries with a firm skin and a uniform hue. They should move freely in the container. Only wash blueberries just before eating them, as they absorb moisture and begin to degrade sooner. Store in a covered container in your refrigerator for up to a week, but keep in mind that they will be freshest the sooner you eat them. When not in season (or just because), frozen or dried blueberries are excellent alternatives. If frozen, be sure to shake the bag gently, feeling for loose blueberries. Clumps may indicate that the bag has been thawed and refrozen.

Blueberries are not only nutritious but they taste great! It is easy to incorporate them into your diet ~ smoothies, atop yogurt, with your cereal, mixed in salads, or just as is. How will you put blueberries into your meals this week?
*Nutrition Nuggets is intended to provide information and ideas on health and nutrition topics. Please remember that any major changes in lifestyle or diet should first be discussed with your physician.

Did You Know?

The blueberry is part of the Heath family, which makes it a relative of the cranberry and bilberry, as well as azaleas, mountain laurels, and rhododendrons!
